

Dear Undocu-Family,

There are a great deal of things going on right now in the world and one of those things was the DACA decision. On June 18th the Supreme Court made its ruling that the way the current administration took to try and remove DACA was arbitrary and capricious and therefore, DACA was saved. For now. Because of the decision, DACA is set to return to its original mandate from 2012. There is still uncertainty on whether new applications will be accepted, but you can still continue to renew. There are many feelings surrounding this decision which is understandable. You are entitled to feel all those feelings and no one should make you feel like they aren't valid. Within that, always remember that we are a community. There are 10+ million other people that don't have what we DACAmented people have.

As a community, we have to continue to fight against this oppressive and discriminatory system. We have to use this privilege and open the doors for others that weren't so lucky. Undocumented folk have paved the way for so many things and they did that before DACA. So we have to work towards passing legislation that one day will include all undocumented folk and not just a select few.

Dreamers United will continue to be the community that you can rely on. We have a duty to push for better. There is a community of people in our corner and they are willing to fight with us. Let's use that and not settle for less. We will continue to fight to have our voices heard around campus, and will work towards making an impact on that place we call OUR university. This fight has not ended, it has just begun.

With love,

Dreamers United Executive Team

Ps: As new information comes in we will make sure to keep you updated.